

RENELL S. DUPREE, MD
Family Medicine
Wyncote Family Medicine

Renell S. Dupree, MD, received her Bachelor of Arts degree in Public Policy with an emphasis in biological sciences at the University of Chicago in 2002. Before continuing her education in medicine, Dr. Dupree conducted immunology research while also taking courses in a post-baccalaureate program at University of Pennsylvania in preparation for medical school. In 2014, she earned her medical degree at Drexel University College of Medicine. She completed her residency in Family Medicine at Abington - Jefferson Health. Dr. Renell S. Dupree is board certified in Family Medicine.

Dr. Dupree was born and raised in Gary, Indiana. She became interested in medicine at a young age and involved herself in science and medically related programs all throughout middle and high school. While at University of Chicago, she developed a love for medical research that ultimately brought her to Philadelphia where she continued her research in immunology at the Children's Hospital of Philadelphia for several years before matriculating to medical school. She has published research articles and presented research with regard to immunological cell function and regulation.

Dr. Dupree has interests related to weight management, underserved populations, and women's health. Her goal as a physician is to develop long-lasting relationships with her patients, where she can listen to their needs and concerns and help guide them toward steadily making good health decisions that will lead to physical and mental healthiness and wholeness. She desires to work together as a team with her patients to achieve the best health outcomes.

Dr. Dupree enjoys spending time with her family, cooking, traveling, exploring the arts, gardening, and running. She is currently an active member of the dance ministry at her church, where she ministers in liturgical/lyrical dance every Sunday.
